OFF THE TRACK? --Saw a sightseeing bus roaming around Carmel last week with a "Chinatown Tour" sign on its front.

BEST SUMMER: - Local woman says she started keeping track of sunny days in Carmel early in May. Swears she counted 114 before the fog rolled in. Wotta year!

INSTEAD OF GIVING OUT TICKETS, Policeman Noel Clarabut was riding around on his motorcycle handing out cigars last Friday. The reason: a six-pound boy. No wonder we didn't get a parking ticket on that day.

SMALL THINGS COUNT-- One reason for the outstanding success of the Monterey County Fair this year, we believe, is the fair authorities' devotion to small things.---Fair President Corum Jackson worked late into the night last Tuesday to provide free bus transportation from all parts of the Peninsula. The Central Labor Council of the Peninsula must be congratulated for their cooperation in this matter. Another fine step was the provision of adequate parking with the cooperation of the Navy.

HANNAH GIVES BIRTH TO COO-- Valleyite L. J. Hannah, the former big time advertising man turned serious scientist, has come up with a second product. Unlike So Help Me Hannah, a cure for poison oak, the new product "COO" is for diaper rash and chafing.

EARLY CAMPAIGN-- A newspaperman from Santa Barbara dropped in to visit us this week proudly displaying a Stevenson-for-President sticker on his car. What's the idea? Seems that a Stevenson-for-President Club has been started down South and that the group as a publicity gag dug up some last election stickers and put them on their cars. Getting plenty of questions if not votes, they say, and thinking of adding a "Had Enough" sticker soon.

PRETTY HIGH SCHOOL GIRL ventured forth the other day to sell subscriptions to The Spectator. She came back all happiness.

"This was swell," she said. "I sold a subscription and I got two jobs as a baby sitter." Then she added: "And I made three new friends."

IS CARMEL, somehow, behind the times? Passed a Maryland car this week with a 1954 license. And here we are only a couple of months past the half-mark of 1953.

Village By-Lines

JUST NEIGHBORLY-- Neighbor vicinity of Guadalupe and Fifth accused neighbor of allowing her dog to take liberties on his ice plants. Argument taken to police. Police advised there wasn't much they could do since dog was on leash.

WOT HOPPENED--NO TICKET-- Resident reported car illegally parked vicinity of Fifth and Monte Verde. Courtesy card issued to car parked on the sidewalk area.

BUGGY AND high chair needed for one week starting Sept. 15. Phone: 7-3754.

FORGETFUL-- Resident reported Cadillac car parked for an hour vicinity of Mt. View and Torres with motor running. Police turned off motor and lights. Forgetful owner came to station to thank police for service.

HOUSE WANTED TO RENT-- one person; walking dist. to town, furn. or unfurn., 1 bedroom or large living room. 7-7829.

EVERYONE LOVES A SOLDIER-- Policeman saw soldier running near Fifth and Mission. Found soldier had been drinking. Soldier brought to station and released since "not drunk enough to book," advised to "stay off the back streets in town and perhaps that it would be best if he would leave town now."

NOTES
FROM CARMEL, CARMEL VALLEY AND PEBBLE BEACH

Mrs. Nazrat Farooki, a visitor - courtesy the Ford Foundation - from Pakistan, was entertained by the Carmel Art Association Saturday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. John Cunningham of the Association and John Halloran, new curator, were among those on hand at the gallery reception to greet her.

Mrs. Nazrat Farooki and John Halloran

Earlier that day, Mrs. Farooki, dressed in the costume of her country, was conducted on a tour of the Monterey County Fair, where she busied herself with an 8-mm. movie camera.

Destined to become a fine arts teacher in a college in Karachi, Mrs. Farooki is using the year the Ford Foundation has allotted her for a tour of art schools and art centers of the United States. In New York, she "observed" the Art Students League; in Chicago, the Chicago Art Institute; on the Peninsula, well, everything the Peninsula has to offer.

"I think it was sweet of my husband," she remarked, "to let me off for a year. Even here, that would be unusual. Wouldn't it?"

The cast of "Sight Unseen" - 25 of them - had a "blow-out" party at Los Laureles Lodge on Wednesday.

Mary Stewart, who recently left a job at Herlong to await reassignment to Japan, has been spending some time with her mother, Mrs. Andrew Stewart, in the Valley.

Mrs. Ashton Stanley, wife of the La Playa's manager, and Mrs. W. N. Dekker will sail from New York on September 5. Their destination: Europe. Their ship: the El Caronia.

The two Carmel women will first tour England and Scotland, then take a motor tour through Germany. Scheduled to hit Paris on November 1, they "have no idea" where they'll go from there. It depends, they say, on whether the thought of a Christmas away from home will overcome them at this point.

Juvenile Race Riot Flares In King City

By VIRGIL MITCHELL

Murder, a juvenile gang war and shades of racial discrimination cropped up in a jumbled mess among the wide fields around King City, Greenfield and Soledad last week. And despite a nite-and-day investigation by sheriff's deputies and members of the district attorney's staff, it was pretty much a muddle at the middle of this week.

For several years reports have been seeping in from King City that the school board, teachers and students at the high school have tolerated discrimination against boys and girls of Mexican extraction. Mexican-American boys as a rule couldn't get on the football team and they weren't welcomed into other extra-curricular activities. Reliable sources report that a number of parents complained that Mexican-American boys and girls were encouraged to drop out of high school and go to work.

The background of the gangs and last Thursday night's murder of Max Montalbetti--a 16-year-old youth of Swiss extraction--has been tracked by some officials directly to the issue of race discrimination. It was reported officially that the "white" boys were the aggressors and that the gang of Mexican-American boys was organized loosely for self defense.

Monday night a meeting was called in King City to discuss the seriousness of gangs in the schools. The meeting was attended by probation officers, Sheriff Jack McCoy, Supervisor William Redding, representatives of the county superintendent of schools and PTA groups, and King City high school trustees and teachers. While two members of the press were present, it was understood that no reports of the meeting would be published unless specific recommendations were adopted. No recommendations came out of the meeting.

But here is what took place. Several parents complained about the supervision of county peace officers and court officers. The record was set straight when Sheriff McCoy pointed out that none of his deputies were advised of a troublesome situation until after the gang fight and murder.

Nearly every official present stood his ground and tossed the matter smack back into the laps of parents and school officials. It was revealed that although boys as young as 14 years were held at the county jail until after 4 o'clock the following morning, only one parent called a law enforcement agency to make an inquiry.

It was also pointed out that a number of the boys had their family cars, but the parents were unconcerned until officers awakened them for questioning.

But most important, many parents admitted to knowing that trouble was brewing and confessed that they did nothing to stop it. Other parents took such measures as sending their sons away or keeping them home --but they did not make a report to the responsible agencies whose personnel could have prevented the murder and knifings.

And when the question of racial prejudice was raised, the King City groups denied prejudice existed. However, no one would report on the number of Mexican-Americans invited to attend the meeting. And throughout the evening session the subject of racial prejudice was sidetracked and ignored.

There is something incongruous about two juvenile gangs--numbering more than 50 boys--meeting to do battle with ball bats, heavy chains, sections of water pipe, and knives in an agricultural community. One expects a certain amount of gang activity among juveniles in big cities, but not among the wide fields and peaceful countryside of a rich farming valley.

If this is a case of racial dis-

Get out your shootin' irons; the dove season is upon us and there seems to be a pretty good supply of doves throughout this area. Also up north of San Francisco the coveys are heavy.

If you are a dove hunter, the first thing you want to consider is the size shell. A lot of the boys are using 7-1/2 or 8's. Personally, I like 9's.

If you are using a modified choke, that will reach your birds at 35 yards or thereabouts and, if you are using a full choke, you can handle them at 40 yards with 8's or 9's.

You do need a lot of shot because these birds get around. However, in spite of the fact that they look as if they were flying a little bit faster than a jet plane, they actually top only about forty miles an hour. If a dove is crossing in front of you about 40 yards -that is, at a right angle- you can lead him about six feet, figuring his speed is about average.

Most of the shot-gunners really appreciate and admire a Parker shotgun. Just thought you might be interested in some of the prices that came out on these originally.

Back in 1899 when a dollar was really worth a dollar, they still got up to $400 for Parker shot-guns.

Of course, they ran down to $50, which is the cheapest thing ever put out and for Parker that wasn't much.

An average Parker gun with pretty good steel barrels, and nicely done with a small amount of engraving, ran about $100 to $150. At that period that would be the equivalent of $500 now, I suspect.

Prowling through one of these same old catalogues I saw Smith and Wesson revolvers listed at $10 and $11.50 with the tops running $12.50. Colts running about $13 and then on down (both ways) to about $10 and up as high as (get this) "for single action" $16.00.

BLACKIE, the California sea lion (no seal) that frequents the waters off Monterey's Wharf, evidently prefers blondes.

Photographer Parker Kimball first spotted Blackie about 50 yards off shore fighting. When not wolfing fish down at the wharf, the 1,000 pound bull is king of the local herd on Bird Rock, 17 Mile Drive.

A few herring flipped into the water by Millie, Parker's beautiful wife, brought him alongside with the swain smile. Encouraged, Millie made him leap for a few.

And then to prove that gentlemen prefer blondes or that a woman will do anything for the promise of being taken out for dinner by her husband, she risked allowing the lion to steal a fish from her mouth. Something, by the way, that wharf fishermen, who have been feeding the lion for several years, would not dare.

PRAISE FOR PATON

I would sing this week a pean of praise for a book which is written in a style of almost suffocating beauty, a style of such poetic magnificence that I remain lost in awe and envy.

The book is Alan Paton's TOO LATE THE PHALAROPE (Charles Scribner's Sons, $3.50), like his earlier and equally splendid "Cry, the Beloved Country," a novel of his native South Africa.

That amazing first novel, which built for Alan Paton a body of true believers almost cult-like in its enthusiasm, was made into a musical play called "Lost in the Stars," which provided me with one of the most memorable emotional experiences I've ever known.

"Cry, the Beloved Country" was so good that it seemed unlikely its author could ever do as well again. He's done better.

If I talk first about style let it not be supposed that the story wrapped therein is not equally good. Of that--of plot and character--more in a moment.

To properly assess the Paton style I'm forced back to Edgar Allan Poe. There is a major difference: Paton is not guilty of the overly-elaborate alliteration which makes much of Poe seem artfully artificial. But the rolling, poetic cadence is there in both of them, the purity and balance of sentence structure, the truly functional use of descriptive words and phrases. It is the sort of prose within which an author dares to write tragically of tragedy, beautifully of beauty and romantically of romance.

> John F. Allen, one of the top writers on the San Francisco Examiner staff, is a former West Coast editor of Time Magazine. He reviews books exclusively for this publication.

It's a sort of prose which has suffered a nearly complete eclipse in the past thirty years or more, its light blocked by tough and pungent talk. I hold no particular brief for one school of writing over the other. I do object to one eclipsing the other.

I suspect that many another author could and would write with a degree of poetic magnificence if he dared. But, currently it isn't the thing to do, and too many men are frightened of their own emotions, frightened of a public attuned to an obdurate realism, and of critics too ready to sneer.

To read Paton is to rediscover the beauty of the English language, of its words used as perfect building blocks in the construction of soaring sentences and paragraphs. This is not to imply that Mr. Paton works and struggles to fit his blocks and to balance one against the other. This is no engineering feat. We have it from Paton himself that his words flow onto paper only when the story is in him to be told. In a letter to The Saturday Review, he wrote:

"If there is a story in me, it gives me intense pleasure to write it down... While I am writing, I do nothing else.... I do not discipline myself to write so many hours or so many words a day. When I am absorbed in the work of writing I can write as many as ten thousand words a day, even three chapters of a story... When I think the time has come to write another book, I shall write it, on the same terms as before. And those terms are, if you write a book, write it with your whole heart and soul."

What Paton writes of here--with his whole heart and soul--is a subject which is his whole life: relations between the blacks and the whites in South Africa.

The protagonist is Pieter van Vlaanderen, a young Afrikaner, war hero, star rugby player, and now a police lieutenant in a small South African town, looked up to as the perfect man, the embodiment of all that is good and just, by both blacks and whites. Actually, we see through the eyes of Pieter's Aunt Sophie, he is torn by psychological ambivalence, and has been all his life.

"He was always two men. The one who was the soldier of the war, with all the English ribbons that his father hated; the lieutenant in the police, second only to the

"BABY BE STILL" OPENS TONIGHT

Bundle up. Tonight's the night "Baby Be Still" opens in the Forest Theater.

The "completely local" musical comedy, fourth original dramatic production of the Three Ring Theater, will run every evening through Sunday at 8:30 p.m.

The Carmel Kiwanis Club has underwritten expenses for the show.

A large cast - 16 principals and a chorus of 34 - draws talent from the youth of Carmel and from various Peninsula military installations, and includes such well-known local thespians as Ruth McElroy, Betty Fowlston and Allen Knight.

Ric Masten authored the book and song lyrics, Don Adams the music. Cole Weston directs. Joanne Nyx is dance director, Jimmy Griffin choral director.

The plot of "Baby Be Still" - and there is a plot, according to Masten - concerns a group of artists from the city who invade a sleepy ghost town. "Baby," the heroine, has been described as "not quite human."

PENINSULA COOKS

BY SHIRLIE STODDARD

Just Desserts

Sometimes it seems as though Mrs. Paul Low of Carmel were the cookingest woman on the Peninsula.

Drop in on her most any afternoon and she's busy in her sunny, colorful kitchen, her pug dog Vicky cheerfully underfoot.

"It might look as though I cook all the time," she'll tell you, laughing. "But I can assure you, I don't. It's just that when I'm having company, I make a project of it and cook almost all day - the day before the company comes.

"Then, on the day of the party, I haven't very much to do. And after that, I don't have any company for awhile. I rest on my laurels until the next time."

Another misconception about Connie Low: she is called, by her friends, a "fancy" cook. "I'm not much for fancy stuff," she protests. "Oh, the things I make might give the impression of being fancy, hard to make. Don't you believe it! The minute anything looks like too much work, I throw it out.

"My father always said he didn't like food that looked as though it had been breathed on, and I feel the same way.

"All my favorite recipes are ones that make people sit up and say, 'How do you do it?' but don't, if the truth were known, take much doing."

Take her recipe for rum omelette, for instance. Simple, easy but oh how "fancy"!

EASY RUM OMELETTE

Beat 4 egg yolks, add 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/2 cup powdered sugar and 2 tablespoons rum.

Beat 4 egg whites until stiff and fold into egg-yolk mixture.

Cook in hot buttered pan until delicately brown on one side. Place in medium hot oven until brown on top. Spread with tart currant jelly. Fold. Sprinkle with powdered sugar.

Warm 1/2 cup rum, pour over omelette, serve lighted.

The above formula is one Mrs. Low likes to use Sunday evenings, and it makes a fine windup for a buffet meal of "Poor Man's Sandwiches" (French bread spread with ham, salami, cheese, turkey or whatever a guest likes to slap on by himself) and tossed green salad.

She is, as you may have heard, particularly noted for her desserts. Here's another:

FOOL-PROOF SPONGE CAKE

1-1/4 cups cake flour
1 cup granulated sugar
1/2 teaspoon double-acting baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
6 egg whites
1 teaspoon cream of tartar
1/2 cup additional granulated sugar
6 egg yolks
1/4 cup cold water
1-1/2 teaspoons vanilla
1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract

This cake has never failed to come out "perfect," but it should be made only by those who have an electric beater. The secret is to beat the egg whites VERY VERY stiff.

Sift flour, 1 cup sugar and baking powder into small mixer bowl. Separate eggs, putting whites in large mixer bowl, egg yolks in any small bowl. To yolks, add water, vanilla and almond extract. Blend, then add to flour.

Sprinkle salt and cream of tartar on egg whites. Beat at high speed, gradually adding 1/2 cup sugar, until very stiff. Then beat mixture in small mixer bowl for 1 minute at medium speed. Fold gradually into egg whites. Cut through gently with knife to break air bubbles. Pour into 10-inch ungreased tube pan.

Bake at 350 degrees for 45-50 minutes. Cool in pan at least an hour.

Speaking of sponges, here's Mrs. Low's recipe for:

CHOCOLATE SPONGE PUDDING

I.

1/2 cup sugar
1 cup flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 T. ground chocolate
1/2 cup milk
1/2 cup chopped walnuts
2 T. butter
1 teaspoon vanilla

Sift flour, baking powder, salt, chocolate and sugar, add melted butter and milk. Blend well. Add nuts and vanilla. Spread in buttered casserole.

II.

1/4 cup granulated sugar
1/2 cup brown sugar
3 T. ground chocolate
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla

No. 25 - Mrs. Paul Low

1 cup boiling water

Combine sugars, chocolate, salt and vanilla. Spread over first mixture. Pour boiling water over all. Do not stir! Bake at 350 degrees for 1 hour.

Serve with whipped cream.

"This makes a light sponge on top, a thick chocolate sauce on the bottom. We prefer it served warm," Mrs. Low adds.

If you think that sounds good, try this:

PÊCHES CONDÉ

Heat 1-1/2 pints milk in double boiler. Stir in 1/2 cup rice, and, if you like, two thin slivers of lemon peel. Cook about an hour until milk is nearly absorbed. Remove lemon peel.

Soak 2 T. gelatine in 1/2 cup cold water. Add to cooked rice with 4 slightly beaten egg yolks, 1/4 teaspoon salt and 1/2 cup sugar. Fold in carefully until well mixed. When mixture begins to set, fold in 1 cup stiffly whipped cream. Chill in ring mold.

Soak sliced fresh peaches in raspberry syrup for an hour. If you like, you may add one jigger good sherry. When rice is unmolded, put peaches in center and around.

Pour peach juice and raspberry syrup over rice.

Mrs. Low only dabbled in the culinary arts before she came to Carmel. Originally a New Yorker, she had spent ten years in Paris "coping with a succession of French, Czech and Polish cooks who felt that anything more complicated than beating an egg would soil a lady's pretty hands" before becoming a Carmelite. Finding herself, for the first time, cookless, she applied herself to learning how to cook with the same sort of energy she devotes to politics (a zealous Democrat, she has a finger in most local political pies).

NIEBEL'S RETREAT

High on a knoll in the vast Aguajito tract on Jacks Peak are the headquarters of the Niebel clan.

Set deep into the forest, surrounded by 26 acres of property, up a jolting private drive, it makes an ideal hideaway.

There's a forbidding sign on the drive that says "Beware of Dog."

If you don't heed the sign, a collie will rush at you, barking furiously, bite into the nearest piece of downwood and won't leave you in peace until you throw it for her to be retrieved. Pretty soon, a shepherd will come up in support -- to lick your face.

That's the sort of reception you get at that jolly hideaway, because the Niebels are great believers in hospitality and a good time.

"I can't," says Dr. H. Lee Niebel, an internist from Palo Alto, "keep track of all the names of the people who come here, so I never bother with introductions."

Dr. Niebel and his vivacious wife, Helen, who enjoys cooking, grandmothering, antiques and being an informal hostess, come to their Jacks Peak place almost every weekend.

They are joined, whenever possible, by his son, Dr. James Niebel, a physician at Fort Ord, his wife, and another son, Charles, 34, and his wife, also of Palo Alto.

The two other Niebel offspring can't come to the family gatherings right now. Son Robert, 28, who used to run an antique shop in Carmel, is in Korea, and daughter Ruth is in Tripoli with her State Department husband, Wallace Thompson.

There are always weekend guests, and the family gets together on Jacks Peak at all the holidays.

The Niebels discovered Jacks Peak nearly 20 years ago when, from their former weekend house in Pacific Grove, they used to go riding all over the Peninsula. They picked the spot, bought the property, and had Robert Stanton, Carmel architect, put up the house they wanted for holidays and for retirement.

It's an informal, comfortable, ranch house, designed in the traditional Monterey adobe style.

There is a large living room with a huge fireplace ("Helen wanted a fireplace big enough to crawl into," reports Dr. Niebel;

"and that's what we got."), a picture window with a terrific aerial view of Monterey and the Bay, and cozy furniture, including a sideboard that came around the Horn in 1849 and an English accordion table that dates back to 1800.

There are three bedrooms, one with a corner fireplace, and one with bunk beds where the Niebel offspring used to sleep when they were youngsters. The third bedroom is now used as a guest room.

There are also a long hallway, a roofed porch, a kitchen, pantry, breakfast room and three baths. In the basement are a storage room and the furnace.

Decorations in the house include many old mementoes, including several stuffed former residents on the Niebel property: a ground squirrel, a fox, and a Canadian lynx that somehow got as far as the Monterey Peninsula. There are travel posters, guns and ancient swords, in short, all the various kinds of accessories that give a country place the good, old fireplace feeling.

Outdoors isn't neglected either. There is an outdoor barbecue and a spacious patio that borders right on the surrounding wilderness. The Niebels didn't want a formal garden. They just wanted a few plants to give color here and there, and for the rest they let nature take care of its own.

There are several other buildings on the property; the caretaker's house, inhabitated by a Japanese couple; a barn; tackhouse; riding stable, and woodhouse.

Despite the many guests who visit the Niebels, the estate has an atmosphere of remoteness.

"In fact," says Dr. Niebel, "we'd feel quite lonely here if it weren't for the lights of Monterey at night."

captain; the great rugby player hero of thousands of boys and men. The other was the dark and silent man, hiding from all men his secret knowledge of himself, with that hardness and coldness that make men afraid of him, afraid even to speak to him."

Pieter's father is a stiff-necked, utterly unbending, bible-quoting Boer, a man also of dark and violent moods. To him, as to the other Afrikaners, the cardinal sin of them all is for one of theirs to have sexual relations with one of the blacks. As Paton pictures it, their attitude would make the white supremacy screamers of Alabama seem liberal and civilized indeed. The attitude is difficult to credit, unless you have followed the news of Malan and his ilk, and the completely inhuman approach they take toward the blacks from whom Africa was stolen.

Pieter, torn internally by strifes he fails to understand, is drawn to the black girl, Stephanie. He is not spokesman for Paton, since he is as much in favor of the racial fence as any, goes much against his will to the girl again and again. He is driven there by desires he cannot understand and by a wife who fails to understand his needs.

When finally he is discovered, his world and that of his family are tumbled into the dust. It is an ending both terribly tragic and splendid in its hope. For out of all this, we know that a man has found his soul, and a woman, perhaps, hers.

Alan Paton, because he sees black men as humans, because, like all decent men, he sees no inequality of race, is widely scorned and hated in his native land. It is greatly to the man's credit that he has not here attempted to propagandize--except in the very subtlest sense--for his beliefs.

It would have been easy, but foreign in sense and scope, to have made of Pieter a spokesman for the cause of racial equality, to have him go to Stephanie because he refused to know black from white. But that would not have been the Pieter as Alan Paton knew he must be.

And so, only in its very essence is this a plea for equality. It is so in the sense that all this need not have happened if these men lived the Christianity they profess to believe.

Plea or no, this is one of the most exciting stories in years, and the most beautifully written book in a lot longer than that.

crimination against the Mexican-Americans, then it's time that other agencies enter the picture and stamp out this vicious type of un-Americanism. Since the school is involved in the reports, perhaps the state authorities who allocate public funds to local districts, and the county superintendent of schools should undertake investigations immediately. PTA's, service clubs and veterans' organizations can play an important part by taking determined stands.

(Ed. Note: The county grand jury met to consider various aspects of this case Wednesday nite.)

Cuernavaca's popularity lies in its climate, natural scenic beauty and easy accessibility. It is less than an hour's drive from Mexico City. Ringed by mountains, it has an altitude of 5,000 feet, making the days sunny and the nights cool. Hotels have swimming pools, fed by mountain springs, and al fresco terraces for dining and dancing. Many hotels have bowling, badminton, tennis and horseback riding facilities. The country club, which is open to tourists, has an 18-hole golf course.

Fifty-two miles south of Cuernavaca is Taxco, a bit of old Mexico, which has remained unchanged throughout the centuries and is now preserved as a national monument.

Taxco's red-roofed, white-washed adobe houses of 18th century architecture spilling over slope after slope, its narrow, twisting, cobblestone streets, its magnificent cathedral and mountainside hotels never fail to captivate the newcomer. And the exquisite silver jewelry for which Taxco is so famous is a temptation no one tries to overcome.

Mexico is filled with typically Spanish colonial cities and the two on every tourist's itinerary are Puebla and Guadalajara.

Nearest to Mexico City is Puebla, reached in three hours by automobile or bus. The highway leading to it spins around turns offering sweeping vistas of the Valley of Mexico, climbs to dense, pine-wooded mountain ridges, and then gradually descends to warm pasture land and cultivated fields.

Puebla's clean, narrow streets are one continuous line of ancient, balconied mansions with massive, carved wooden doors and enormous courtyards with graceful fountains.

Puebla produces gay Talavera pottery, a type of earthenware majolica which has a bright design on a gray background. It was invented by the Moors and perfected in Talavera, Spain.

There are many tourist sights in Puebla but the principal one is the secret convent of Santa Monica, which went "underground" during the 19th century when the Mexican government confiscated all religious institutions. Discovered in 1935, it has now been turned into a museum.

Guadalajara lies more than 400 miles north of Mexico City but it is only a two-hour hop from the capital by Campania Mexicana de Aviacion, an associate of Pan American Airways.

This ancient city is succumbing to modernization but the landmarks of its colonial days still preserve its old-world flavor. Guadalajara is famous for the best mariachis (strolling street singers) in Mexico; for beautiful women, and the jarabe tapatio, the Mexico hat dance, which is the country's national dance.

Ten minutes by car from Guadalajara is Tlaquepaque, where the descendants of the Tonaltec Indians make their exquisite, highly decorated earthen ware. They work with dog hair brushes and carry their distinctive patterns in their heads.

Mexico has two lake regions. Lake Chapala, the largest in the country, is only 40 miles southeast of Guadalajara. The town of Chapala, with its green hills sloping down to the water's edge and its elaborate villas lining the lake, is reminiscent of northern Italy.

Totally different from Chapala is Patzcuaro, a 16th century village on a mountain-ringed lake of the same name in Mexico's state of Michoacan. The Tarascan Indians who live at Patzcuaro have scarcely been touched by modern ways. They still speak their own language and stick to their regional

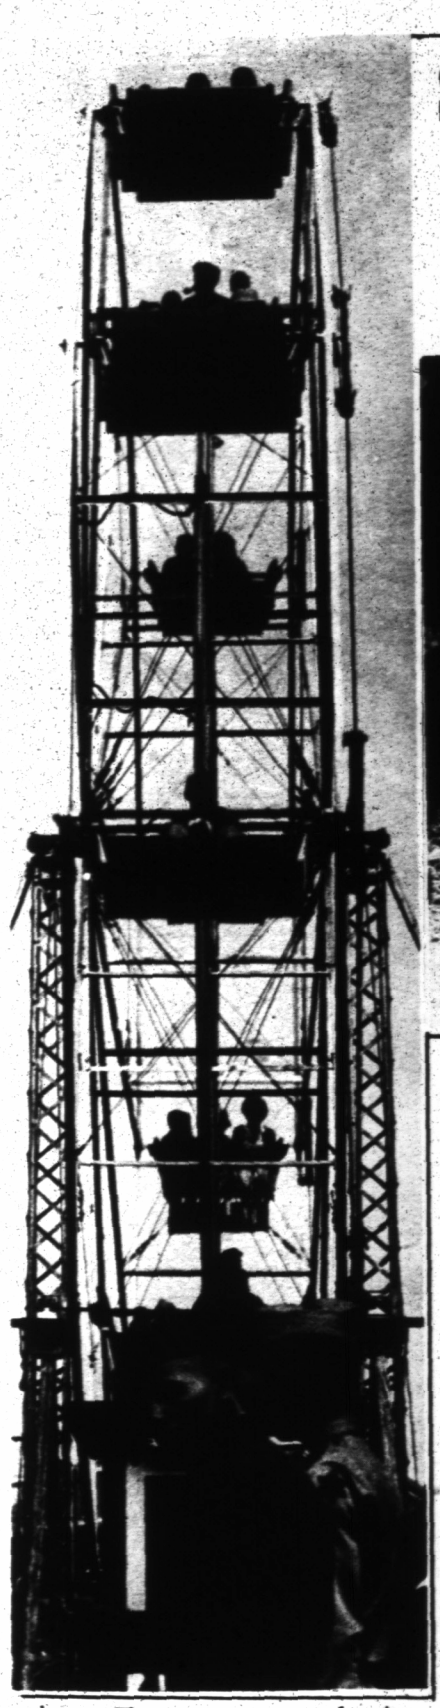
So Long To The Fair

ANOTHER YEAR'S FAIR is over again in Monterey County. Thousands of visitors came to look at the exhibits, have fun on the ferris wheel (left) and other midway attractions, watch the horses, gawk at the livestock and eat candied apples. The only visitors who appeared unimpressed were the cowhands, like the ones below, who looked after the prize beef.



dress. The women wear voluminous scarlet or marine-blue skirts, embroidered blouses, blue-black shawls, and silver and coral jewelry. The men wrap themselves in red and blue serapes and their huge sombreros are always perched at a jaunty angle.

A bit of Pacific paradise is Acapulco. Aeronaves de Mexico, another PAA associate, flies from Mexico City to this deluxe seaside resort in an hour.

Acapulco is in a class by itself. Ringed by ranges of mountains, the town is a jagged semi-circle of parrot-green promontories plunging down to a turquoise sea. Modern hotels and pastel-colored villas cling to the rock cliffs. Beach after beach whiten its rocky shores.

Acapulco is the gayest and most gorgeous place in Mexico. The world meets there in winter, but everyone who sees it predicts that it won't be long before it will be just as crowded in summer.

In the morning you'll swim at tranquil Caleta and Caletilla beaches. In the afternoon you'll battle the surf at Hornos beach. You'll watch boys dive from 120-foot cliffs into a narrow, craggy cove at La Quebrada. You'll go deep sea fishing and dance under the stars on open-air terraces Tourists, in fact, do everything and anything in Mexico. That's why they are going there by the hundreds of thousands.

CATS LIKE FLOWERS TOO!

Don't throw something next time you see a cat ambling about your garden. Chances are he just wants a bit of green or to smell the blossoms. Also, when your cat tries to "worry" a flower from a vase, he isn't trying to wreck your bouquet. He just wants one for himself. Joe is better and says we have wonderful vets here.

Incidentally, at that time for $1.50 extra you could have pearl grips.

If any of you fellows care to write in inquiring about old guns, we have access to a pretty good source of material and we'll be glad to try to help you determine the value or age or caliber or anything else you might want to know about the collection pieces you have in your possession.

Some of the duck flights have already started in to California, pintail particularly, going up in the Klamath and Tule Lake area, the Sacramento, San Joaquin Valleys and the Imperial.

There's about 10,000 acres of grain over there in the Water Fowl Management areas and of course there's going to be a lot of irate farmers who probably figure they are going to suffer quite a bit. The Government's going to help them herd the ducks away from private crops, however, and on to the Management areas, so I don't think they will have too much trouble.

Any of you riflemen who might be figuring on going back to Camp Perry this year might be interested to know that Russ Wissler is going back again to take another try for the high score rifle. You know he is one of the top men in the country. Russ is out of Burlingame and he is owner of the Wissler Western Arms in San Francisco.

"... better send me four dozen of those number fours ... Oh, by the way, that Aztec design isn't moving as fast as I thought it would ..."

The results, as her family (Mr. Low, sons Kirby and Peter, and the three grandchildren) and friends will attest, were good.

"Serve waffles with shaved maple sugar and unsweetened whipped cream!" was her parting shot. "That's upper New York State."

The Labor Day Week End will be a busy one at Pebble Beach.

The Beach Club will start off Friday with a dinner dance for its members. Saturday, Sunday and Monday, the annual Labor Day Tennis Jamboree is scheduled for the Pebble Beach Tennis Club.

The Stillwater Yacht Club will hold its annual Labor Day Regatta. Early entries indicate a large number of visiting yachts will be on hand for the week end. Saturday night the Yacht Club members will host a dinner dance at The Beach Club in honor of their guests, and on Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Matthew C. Jenkins will entertain with a cocktail party at their Pebble Beach home for the visitors. Races will be held at 11 and 2 on Sunday and 11 on Monday.

A buffet luncheon is scheduled for Sunday noon at the Beach Club, followed at four o'clock by a movie for children of members.

The Monterey Peninsula Country Club's weekend activities include a two-ball mixed foursome golf tournament Sunday, followed by a dinner dance at the Club Sunday night. Monday the Club will hold an Old Fashioned Picnic.

At the Carousel Johnny Wittmer takes a lesson in close harmony from visiting Barbara Rynes, American Broadcasting Company Program Director (KGO), and Donna Boyd of Carmel Valley.

CARMEL SEMINAR STARTS NEW SERIES

The Carmel Seminar will meet Tuesday evenings, beginning September 15, for its Autumn series, "God and Man". Sessions will be held from 7:30 to 9:30.

The Seminar will consist of 12 weekly discussion meetings, with short preliminary reading assignments from Plato, the Bible, Pascal, Freud, Toynbee, and others.

The fee for the Autumn Seminar is $15.00 and application should be made by mail to The Carmel Seminar, P.O. Box 2671, Carmel.

Local Horse Makes Good

"Oro," local stallion raised by Lynn Hodges, is beginning to make a name for himself in the racing world.

The horse, for whose purchase Mrs. Paul Clark of Pebble Beach is negotiating, recently won a 330-yard quarterhorse race at Stockton and has been picked as favorite for future races.

Stamp Club Holds Auction

An auction of stamps will be the feature of the September 7 meeting of the Monterey Peninsula Stamp Club.

Tom Dudley of Salinas will be auctioneer.

The meeting is set for 8 p.m. at Carmel High School.
